Baby on Board, Part 2: No Excuse Not to Plan

Many of us lead incredibly busy lives. Work, social events with friends and family, taking the kids from one place to another, trying to make a better life for my family, and so forth. Who has time to think about estate planning? That is something far down on the list for most people because they just don't have time for it and don't want to think about it.

I always wondered why people would not take the time to make sure they have a plan in place for their family, but now I get it.

I found myself, an estate planning attorney, putting off updating my own estate plan, even with the birth of my daughter. Like most people I have found myself making excuses so I can spend time on other supposedly more important daily tasks. Then, it hit me - I was looking at the estate planning process all wrong. I viewed estate planning as a task or chore; something most people (myself included) want to avoid. This is the wrong way to look at estate planning. It is not a sterile legal discussion about death and disability.

Planning your estate is an act of love to show the people you care about most how much you love them. It is the ultimate gift.

Watch Out for an Auto-Pay Pitfall

With the prevalence of automated bill payments options, many people have set up online accounts for the seamless payment of all the common household bills. Paperless options can streamline and simplify those recurring monthly bills.

However, it is important for married couples to analyze how these payments and notifications are sent in the event a spouse suddenly passes away.

Client Alert - The Benefits of a Docubank Card

Modern medicine requires the use of medical directives, but having instant and easy access to them is equally important. As clients of the InSight Law Maintenance Plan, Docubank provides a wonderful service to you at no additional charge.

Docubank provides immediate access to your healthcare directives and emergency medical information anywhere at anytime. This can be useful in an emergency situation, or even if you are going in for a scheduled procedure. You should have received a Docubank card shortly after we delivered your estate planning documents to you.

We suggest you place this card next to your insurance card in your wallet so hospitals and helpers have easy access to this information.
